The Tax Commissioner, agent, clerk, commissioner of the revenue, treasurer, or any other state or local tax or revenue officer or employee are prohibited from divulging any private state tax information. This would include publishing names, addresses, telephone numbers and social security numbers on the Internet.

However, localities are permitted to publish (either themselves or through third parties) their real estate books, tangible personal property books, and business license registrations on their Internet websites. This measure would allow a law enforcement officer to have his or her information deleted from these records, thereby, adding security against the possibility that an they, their family and/or their property would become a target for mischief or worse.
