7. Budget amendment necessary: No, additional non-general fund appropriation can be provided administratively.

8. Fiscal implications: Section 34-5 of the Code of Virginia protects spousal and child support liens, but § 34-28.1 of the Code does not specify where child support liability would fall in relation to other creditors when personal injury and wrongful death claims are awarded. The passage of SB 1206 would grant statutory authority for the courts to allow child support liens to be placed on personal injury and wrongful death awards after medical bills and attorneys' fees are satisfied. Also, the State's child support interstate lien would be statutorily required to be honored by another state which would assist in collecting an interstate lien.

The Department recently entered into an agreement with the Child Support Lien Network (CSLN) whose objective is to perform data matching to increase support collection through interception of insurance claim settlements before they are sent to a claimant who owes past due child support. This bill would assist in increasing the amount of collections DCSE will receive from the CSLN, eliminate litigation over whether the department can claim these proceeds, and give the insurance industry some comfort knowing that DCSE can legally attach these personal injury and wrongful death proceeds.

In FY2002, DCSE collected $104,348,616 in child support payments from 16,476 liens that were in place. With the passage of SB1206, it is estimated that the amount of collections from personal injury and wrongful death awards would increase collections approximately $3.1 million ($104,348,616 * 3 percent). All collections are included in DCSE's revenue and all payments pass through to the custodial parent.
