WHEREAS, tackling the new challenge with drive and determination, Eldred Hill's first major accomplishment was persuading the General Assembly to change the agency's name to the Virginia Employment Commission (VEC), which created a more positive image, and then he secured $2 million in federal funds for a new building to house the agency; and

WHEREAS, during Eldred Hill's seven-year tenure as commissioner, new VEC branches were built in 17 communities, and the commission saw the number of workers placed in jobs rise from 82,000 in 1959 to more than 110,000 per year by 1966; and

WHEREAS, in 1966 Eldred Hill accepted an appointment as director of industrial development for the Commonwealth, and he accompanied then Governor Mills Godwin on his first overseas trade mission; and

WHEREAS, Eldred Hill moved to McLean in 1967 to become executive director, and later president, of Unemployment Benefit Advisors, Inc., (now UWC—Strategic Services on Unemployment & Workers' Compensation), a group of businesses that advocates keeping unemployment benefits under state rather than federal administrative control; and

WHEREAS, well-known and respected as an expert on workers' compensation and unemployment insurance law, Eldred Hill testified frequently before congressional committees, and he was appointed to the National Commission on Unemployment Compensation by President Gerald Ford and re-appointed by President Jimmy Carter; and

WHEREAS, in 1984 Eldred Hill helped found and served as president of the National Foundation for Unemployment and Workers' Compensation, whose purpose is to conduct research and report on issues relating to unemployment compensation and workers' compensation, and in 1993 he retired from both Unemployment Benefit Advisors and the foundation; now, therefore, be it
