Current Law

Virginia law does not require individuals filing withholding tax returns on behalf of an organization to provide their social security number with such returns. TAX has general authority to prescribe the forms for all of the taxes it administers. Currently the forms for withholding tax require the taxpayer identification number of the taxpayer, not the officer or employee who signs on behalf of a corporation or other organization.

At one time the registration form for electronic funds transfer (EFT) required that an individual setting up electronic withdrawals from a bank account furnish his social security number. After receiving a complaint about this requirement in December, TAX reexamined the EFT registration process and determined that the use of the social security number could be avoided. TAX has modified the forms and procedures accordingly.

Proposal

This bill would prohibit TAX from requiring that a person filing withholding taxes furnish his social security number when filing such a return using an electronic medium with TAX. The person would have to include his social security number if his own wages and withholding are included in the return.
