WHEREAS, businesses need broadband to attract customers and employees, job seekers need broadband to find jobs and training, and children need broadband to get a quality education; and

WHEREAS, broadband can also provide other benefits, including lowering the delivery costs and improving the quality of health care and enabling people with disabilities and Americans of all income levels to participate more fully in society; and

WHEREAS, a lack of broadband coverage continues to be a problem in many areas of the Commonwealth, especially in rural areas; and

WHEREAS, these communities could benefit from strategies that bridge the broadband deployment gap, which may include fiber optic and wireless technology solutions, public-private partnerships, and regulated markets that offer a choice of service providers and competitive prices; and

WHEREAS, without broadband infrastructure and services, unserved and underserved areas of the Commonwealth risk exclusion from participation in the growing digital economy; now, therefore, be it
