WHEREAS, after gaining a tenuous foothold on one of the most heavily fortified segments of the Normandy coast in the early hours of that bloody morning, the 116th Infantry and the 111th Artillery, suffering heavy casualties, fought their way off the beach and became part of the force that captured the strategic French town of St. Lo only eight days later; and

WHEREAS, cited numerous times shortly after the Normandy invasion by, among others, General Omar Bradley and the commander of Allied ground forces in Normandy, General Bernard Montgomery, the men of the 116th Infantry and the 111th Artillery performed with extraordinary gallantry, valor, and courage under conditions of unimaginable horror; and

WHEREAS, as survivors of these storied units prepare to visit the battlefields of Normandy on the 50th anniversary of the invasion of Europe, it is entirely fitting that their deeds be once again acknowledged, recognized, and celebrated; now, therefore, be it
