(Proposed by the House Committee on Rules

(Patron Prior to Substitute—Delegate Armstrong)

Establishing a commission to study the feasibility and appropriateness of creating public-private partnerships for the operation of nonstate museums and other educational and cultural entities.

WHEREAS, museums are recognized today not only as cultural and educational institutions, but also as catalysts for economic growth; and

WHEREAS, whether created by governments or private entities, museums and other cultural institutions operate as nonprofit enterprises, relying on public and private funding to support their cultural and educational missions; and

WHEREAS, the Commonwealth boasts over 400 history, science, art, and children's museums; and

WHEREAS, these museums, whether operated by government or private entities, enhance educational opportunities for all Virginians, promote community growth and economic development, and enrich the overall quality of life for citizens throughout Virginia; and

WHEREAS, while the diverse collections of Virginia's nonstate institutions may include historic artifacts, artistic treasures or wildlife, the missions of these institutions are linked by an unfailing commitment to education, economic development, and community service; and

WHEREAS, continued access to and excellence in the arts and education are contingent upon the availability of adequate and stable funding for nonstate educational and cultural institutions; and

WHEREAS, the development of consistent, equitable funding for nonstate educational museums will enhance the ability of these institutions to continue and fulfill their missions of service, education and development; and

WHEREAS, to meet pressing fiscal challenges, some states have turned to innovative models for the funding and operation of these educational and cultural entities, exploring public-private partnerships, designated revenue sources, and other mechanisms to sustain these organizations; and

WHEREAS, while a joint legislative study committee examined Virginia's educational museums and the appropriate level of public funding for these institutions pursuant to HJR 453 (1993), HJR 75 (1994), and HJR 430 (1995), additional study is needed to explore those innovative partnerships that have been employed in other states; now, therefore, be it
