Current Law

Virginia law provides real property owners whose property has undergone assessment numerous ways to obtain information regarding the assessment. Local assessors must maintain current property appraisal cards that contain the appraised value of the property and improvements for all parcels of real estate they assess, and these cards must be made available for inspection, unless they contain confidential information. Additionally, localities must allow such taxpayers to examine the working papers that the assessing official used in reaching the property's assessed value, if the taxpayer requests. Assessing officers also must provide information regarding the methodology employed in the calculation of a property's assessed value, including the capitalization rate used to determine the property's value, a list of comparable properties or sales figures considered in the valuation, and any other market surveys, formulas, matrices, or other factors considered in determining the value of the property, upon a taxpayer's request.

In appeals of assessments by owners of real property containing less than four residential units, the assessor must provide written notice to the owner at least 45 days before the appeal informing him of his right to review the assessment records and to have the assessor make a physical examination of the property. The assessor has 15 days from the taxpayer's written request in an appeal to provide such assessment records or is required to present at the hearing: i) copies of the records; ii) testimony to explain methodologies used in determining the assessed value of the property, and iii) testimony indicating that the assessed value was reached in accordance with generally accepted appraisal practices. In appeals to a circuit court, the taxpayer must make the written request for assessment records no later than 45 days prior to trial, unless otherwise ordered by the court.
