WHEREAS, in 1863, the United States War Department established the Bureau of Colored Troops, enabling the country's military branches to recruit African Americans to fight for the Union; in May 2014, the USCTD formally recognized the formation of the bureau at a Founders Day observance in Chesapeake; and

WHEREAS, according to some accounts, by the end of the Civil War, there were more African American soldiers from the Chesapeake area fighting for the Union than there were local soldiers fighting for the Confederate cause; and
