4. Title: Post-release supervision

5. Summary:

Under current law, courts are required, for felony convictions, to impose a period of post-release supervision of at least six months, to be served after release from incarceration. The Parole Board supervises and reviews offenders on post-release supervision and may recommit offenders to incarceration if conditions of the supervision are violated. The proposed legislation would clarify that the additional term is one of incarceration that must be suspended pending satisfaction completion of the terms of supervision after release from incarceration for the underlying offense.
